akashayy: Nothing. You'd be naive to think otherwise. I've spent these past few months resisting people who've tried to get close to me, constantly pushing people out of my life out of fear of them walking out on me. Get some exercise. When you're feeling angry, doing some moderate exercise could help you. A study by the University of Georgia suggests that moderate exercise (such as running or riding a bike) during or immediately after an upsetting experience can help you manage the experience of anger.
