A Little League benchwarmer who saw more time in the dugout than in the game suddenly dies of a rattlesnake bite. His team was getting ready for the game that would decide who would go to Williamsport for the Little League World Series. It involves a mystery and baseball and...well, midgets. The story is so funny that at a couple of spots I almost spat out my dentures. There are only two other writers who have been able to make me laugh out loud while I was reading alone, in an empty house: Ferrol Sams (Run With the Horsemen) and (of course) Elmore Leonard. Seven original baseball short stories in the mystery and murder genres, written by an all star lineup of writers, each of whom understand the game's lore and tactical nuances as well as its deep roots in American life. Compiled by Otto Penzler, the proprietor of The Mysterious Bookshop in New York City and regarded as the world's foremost authority on crime, mystery and suspense fiction. - Murderers Row Original Baseball Mysteries
